

Temagami Family Health Team offers new service

Sue Nielsen
Speaker Reporter

TEMAGAMI — The Temagami Family Health Team (TFHT) has announced it is now offering a new medical service to its patients.

The intravenous (IV) iron infusion procedure was performed for the very first time on a patient in the clinic on September 21.

An IV iron infusion is a procedure in which iron is delivered into the body via a needle.

“The patient did very well and was happy to have had the service available within her community of Temagami without the need for travel,” said Temagami FHT executive director Ellen Ibey in an email message.

Prior to offering the new service, Ibey mentioned the team collaborated with The Temiskaming Hospital “who graciously provided training for the team’s Registered Practical Nurse.”

Ibey said physicians normally prescribe infusions to treat iron deficiency anemia. It is also treated with dietary changes and iron supplements that are taken in pill form.

She said in some cases doctors may recommend iron infusions instead.

Patients may require IV iron infusion if they cannot take iron by mouth, or cannot absorb iron through the gut. Other circumstances include if blood loss is high and they can’t absorb enough iron, or they need to increase their iron levels fast to avoid other medical complications or a blood transfusion.

Ibey says her team will be doing approximately 40-50 IV iron transfusions per year in Temagami.

“There are new pregnancy guidelines in terms of hemoglobin, which has resulted in an increased need for IV iron infusions. It is also important to note that our clinic has put safety protocols in place to make sure we can bring the safety standards of hospitals closer to the home of our patients.”

She said the Temagami clinic is equipped with full resuscitation equipment and has emergency medication available to use as part of their best practice emergency ana-phylaxis and adverse effect protocol.

The Temagami Family Health Team performed its first IV iron infusion on patient Patricia Duggan in the clinic on September 21. On the left is nurse practitioner Nancy Presseault and on the right is registered nurse practitioner Chantal Dinel. (Supplied photo)